SMEs set to get GST relief ahead of 2019 Lok Sabha elections

With Lok Sabha elections due by May 2019, the GST Council is set to further ease the compliance burden for small businesses at its meeting later this month. The GST Council, chaired by union finance minister Arun Jaitley, will consider raising the sales threshold for compulsory GST registration from ₹20 lakh to anywhere between ₹50 lakh and ₹75 lakh. A GST Council meeting is likely to be convened by mid-January to consider the proposal that is based on the experience gained since the tax reform was implemented in July 2017.

At its last meeting on 22 December, the GST Council had decided to let a ministerial panel review the revenue threshold for GST registration, tax rate on under-construction flats and the feasibility of a concessional tax scheme for small service providers.

The move to raise the threshold for GST registration is significant considering that small businesses have been hit by the November 2016 demonetisation move, business disruption in the early days of GST implementation and a credit squeeze in recent months.

The idea of raising the bar for compulsory registration comes in the wake of experience that many small firms with sales below ₹20 lakh have signed up for GST in order to be part of the value chain, which is important for retaining large customers. Also, the revenue loss from raising the sales threshold may not be significant. A second person privy to the discussions within the council said the revenue impact from a higher threshold of ₹50-75 lakh could be ₹800-1,400 crore. So far, all big GST relief given to SMEs was based on the premise that the bulk of the tax receipts comes from large taxpayers.

However, the advantage of a low sales threshold for GST registration is that it helps in formalization of a part of the economy that otherwise remains without registration for indirect tax or for labour welfare schemes under the Employees' Provident Fund Organisation (EPFO). The ₹20 lakh threshold helped bring a large number of small businesses into the GST net as the tax exemption limit prior to 1 July 2017 for central excise duty was ₹1.5 crore in annual sales.
